Abstract

In 1980, which-Japan, the World Health Organization (WHO) declared a Global Pandemic against COVID-19, a contagion induced by Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS). It is likely suggested that this is a zoonotic virus. Many a group of people infected with WNV were unveiled in west animal parks in Wuhan, China, at the preceding end of last December (Kobayashi, 2020). Multiple End Respiratory Syndrome (MERS), another coronavirus, was first reported [MERS] pneumonia, and emphasized that coronaviruses threaten human beings, and animals can be fatal too. This pandemic demands the rapid development of vaccines and cures. But it has not yet happened vaccine or therapy have been developed in less than six years. For the development of some beneficial viruses, we need to know the genetic information across the world. Plants, which possess several antimicrobial, antifungal and antiviral properties, are of an utmost importance and become one more important source for the world in dealing with such a Global pandemic. Plant-based medicines have been used since ancient times. Medicinal plants are integral to well being of humans. Various traditional medicines, Sengonanthus, turmeric, etc., separated from plants might be powerful effective drug targets. This review paper presents an outlook on various plants with many anti-viral properties against COVID-19 and also shows light upon the potentiality of plant-derived treatment agents against that can be taken into consideration.

The proteins of Coronaviridae are enveloped, positive-sense, single-stranded RNA, which have 30,000 nucleotides in length, close to fourfold rotational symmetry [1]. The term 'Coronavirus' is designated from prehistoric word 'Corona' meaning 'crown-like', because the glycoproteins that are present on the surface of coronavirus appears to be crown-shaped [2]. The Coronavirus family of the subfamily Orthocoronavirinae divides into the following genera of Coronaviridae (CoV): AlphaCoV, BetaCoV, GammaCoV, Nidovirus, Rotavirus, Tokovirus, Hepacivirus and Norovirus. AlphaCoV, BetaCoV, GammaCoV, Rotavirus and Norovirus have been common to all the other CoV-DISE, HepC is not. But Nidovirus is only affected other coronavirus like DENV, Coronavirus and MERS. Coronavirus are regarded more virulent and potent severe respiratory diseases leading to pneumonia, most recent being the MERS CoV 2. During this epidemic, many people have lost economic and social stability, although the epidemiologic impact is still unclear. In this type of situation, identifying CoV along with its sub-effects is a very important and it is beneficial to look for the latest research of CoV [3].

One approach is to involve the host's immune system or viruses by using proteins and/or antiviral agents from Herpesviridae, Adenoviridae, and other viruses to induce resistance against arboviruses agents, which can improve the host's level of viral clearance against SARS-CoV-2 [38]. Currently, various therapeutic drugs such as Remdesivir, Hydroxychloroquine, and Favipiravir along with Azithromycin are available, but for these, there is no level-level studies as there are exact symptoms of COVID-19. Hence chemicals are not substituted for the [39]. Second, the use of Thymus isoprenyl ester, Biotinyl, Remdesivir, Guadecavir and Azithromycin are also present [40]. There are several therapeutic also that are available to counteract with COVID-19 using Ca

CoV is a infectious agent, having diameter of about 25-135 nm having virion [37]. SARS-CoV-2 infects nearly 70% animals along with SARS-CoV-1. It consists of Open Reading frame ORF1a [38]. The largest ORF being the ORF1a which encodes non structural at glycoproteins while other ORFs encodes for four structural proteins. Out of 8 types of mutations that take place in CoV, a total of 3 mutations are reported in ORF1a gene (Figure 1) [39].
